Dealing with and Preventing Problems as Tenants

Q. Which do I contact to make my complaint???

There are many different channels, some to make complaints, to influence policies, and to negotiate outcomes on individual cases.

Q. What if I want to find out about my tenancy rights?

Whether you are a private or public tenant, you can contact tenancy services – Tenancy Advice and Advocacy Service, Tenants Union, or Office of Fair Trading. You may need to go to the Consumer, Trader and Tenancy Tribunal (CTTT) or Housing Appeal Committees (an additional avenue for social tenants) to resolve the matter through conciliation or orders from the tribunal bodies.

Q. What additional channels are there for Housing NSW tenants?

You can also contact the Housing NSW funded South Western Regional Tenants Association Inc Liverpool for assistance, and send in complaints through the Housing NSW Client Feedback Line. To appeal Housing NSW decisions (in addition to CTTT), and before Housing Appeals Committee, letters can be directed to the Housing NSW Senior Customer Service Officer. Others you may want to send a copy to in extreme cases include the area director and the minister for housing. The Human Rights Commission and Anti-discrimination Board are also possible channels for obtaining outcomes in situations where discrimination are implicated. You can also contact the local MP.

Q. What about problems with neighbours?

Community Justice Centre can provide free mediation services for disputes resolution, which is outside of tenancy legislation.

Q. What about problems with electricity and water bills?

If you believe you have been overcharged by electricity and water providers, contact your Energy and Water Ombudsman. If you are charged normally but require assistance paying for these contact your local Emergency Relief Provider which may be able to help. Also with some electricity providers they provide concession for people in special circumstances and can negotiate payment plans

Q. What about complaining to create awareness of issues?

To complain about unethical behaviour of Real Estate Agents, complaints can be made to the Real Estate Institute of NSW and the Specialised Support and Services of Office of Fair Trading. To lobby for policy change, you can contact your MP and other political representatives.

Getting emergency, temporary and crisis accommodation

Q. What are the steps for getting temporary emergency housing?

When an individual or family find themselves temporarily homeless, for example they have been evicted and have not yet been successful in their applications in social housing and the private market, there is some help available.

Homeless Persons Information Centre (HPIC) manages vacancies and provides referrals to refuges. Refuges can be inappropriate or unavailable, so Housing NSW may provide temporary emergency housing (motels, caravan parks) for these, but they require that the person fulfils criteria and has contacted HPIC that same day and HPIC could not provide a referral.

1. Contact HPIC to be assessed for referral. If no referral made or referral is inappropriate – in which case the case needs to be made to Housing NSW:
2. Go to the Housing NSW office or if after hours contact the afterhours line; if you are assisting someone you may want to call on the person's behalf while they are with you
3. This process generally has to be repeated everyday that the person needs temporary emergency accommodation until more permanent options are found. Housing NSW may be able to provide temporary emergency accommodation for up to 3 months

Q. What other needs should be considered?

Many people in the situation of needing temporary emergency housing also will require financial assistance and assistance in finding more permanent housing. Please refer to the relevant factsheets for more information.

Finding a Home to Rent

Q. How to apply for social housing?

The main social housing providers in Fairfield are Housing NSW and Hume Housing. Eligibility criteria include having Australian residence and the household gross income being assessed to be under limits. Those offered public or community housing pay a rent that is calculated to a percentage of their income. However, meeting the criteria does not guarantee someone housing – the system includes a normal waiting list which is currently 20 years long in Fairfield, and a priority waiting list. Due to housing shortage, getting onto the priority waiting list is extremely difficult.

The Steps:

1. Application form can be obtained from either Housing NSW or Hume Housing (or on the Housing NSW website), this needs to be filled out along with other requested documentation
2. The applicant who hopes to obtain priority housing needs to obtain support letters explaining why the applicant's circumstances mean, from their expert knowledge, that they need priority housing – from caseworkers, doctors, specialists, teachers, etc.
3. The applicant takes the form and paperwork to either Housing NSW or Hume Housing and waits to for the initial assessment interview. The housing staff should advise the applicant when and how they will hear the decision.

Q. What is co-operative housing?

It is a form of community housing where the tenants manage and maintain the housing themselves as a community. The rent paid is determined by a household's income. It provides affordable housing for people on low to moderate incomes, and is usually formed by community groups of a particular culture, gender, age, etc. Households from communities that have established cooperatives can apply on the respective cooperative's waiting list. Communities wishing to establish a cooperative should contact Common Equity NSW for further information. Http://www.commonequity.com.au

Q. Who can give assistance for someone applying in the private market?

Due to language and other barriers, some people need intensive assistance in making applications in the private market; they are often people in need of social housing forced to apply in the private market due to severe shortage of social housing. It is worth contacting Housing NSW to ask about their waiting list for a Private Rental Brokerage Specialist who could help in some cases. Often, the community sector caseworker is obliged to provide this service as it is unavailable, assisting with internet searches, filling out applications and even taking the applicant to real estate agents and viewings.

Housing for Older Persons – housing, aged care, etc.

Q. Are you a tenant or resident of an aged care service and need to know your rights?

- For tenants:

Older Persons Tenants Service provides advice and advocacy, and community education, for private and social housing tenants aged 55 years and older and to all ‘protected tenants’ regardless of age (if a tenancy began before 1986, one could be a protected tenant and have different rights)

- For residents of hostels, nursing homes and retirement villages:

Contact the Aged Care Rights Centre

Q. What steps to take to get information on or arrange aged care?

There are different levels of care available according to how much assistance is needed. Eg there are hostels and nursing homes and different levels of care within these categories too. See below for what these are. To ensure people are housed appropriate to their level of need people cannot directly apply to nursing homes or hostels.

The Steps:

1. Contact Centre Cluster Referral and Information Service for a referral to ACAT – Aged Care Assessment Team
2. ACAT will arrange a home visit to find out the level of care needed
3. Contact Commonwealth Carelink Centre after ACAT’s report, to find out what services are available and arrange visits.

Q. What is the difference between nursing homes and hostels?

Nursing homes are for those who cannot cope with daily tasks of making meals, laundry, dressing, and need full time care by registered nurses or occupational therapists. Residents usually share rooms, except in homes that are more expensive.

Hostels suit those who need help with caring for themselves, such as showering, dressing, and medication. Most residents have their own room, but use common facilities for dining and recreation.

How do I assist someone with mental health issues with housing needs?

Depending on the mental health issue the person is presenting, especially faced with a housing crisis, if in doubt, you may need to directly ask the person if they are in a suicidal state. If they say they are, you have a duty of care to contact the Mental Health Team and ask them to intervene, or 000 in the case of an emergency. Advise the person of this duty you have where possible.

Always ensure that this person has all the necessary supports by talking with the person and finding out what supports they have already and if other referrals may be helpful, while assisting in collaboration with others, in their housing issues.
